A cavalcade of showbiz figures paraded across the green carpet the fourth annual Turtle Ball when the Turtle Conservancy threw it in New York City on Monday.

Among them was Drew Barrymore, who offered up her signature glowing smile while posing in a flowing dress with starry white patterns speckled across a black field.

Gaps had been carved out of the dress at the shoulders, and it was hemmed shortly above the ankle, giving a full view of her ankle-strap stilettos.

The 42-year-old scion of the Barrymore acting family - that of Lionel, Ethel and John - let her lightly wavy hair tumble down about a pair of green earrings.

Naomi Watts was radiant as ever, having turned up to the event in an off white dress that draped about her enviably svelte figure as she stood for the cameras.

The pleated number featured a sharp collar with double-red lines bordering it, as well as a stretch of frilly fabric sloping across her bust and about her shoulders.

Standing on a pair of white high-heeled shoes, she got in a bit of posing beside Fisher Stevens, who cut a dapper figure in a brown hat, navy suit and scarlet tie.

Edward Norton had rolled up the sleeves of his pale blue dress shirt to showcase his toned forearms, and shoved a hand into the pocket of his charcoal slacks.

His top button had been undone, and he posed alongside his black-cocktail-dress-clad film producer wife Shauna Robertson, whom he'd married in 2012.
